People in middle age tend to have the highest internal locus of control. A downside of an internal locus of control is that, in accepting responsibility, the person has to also accept blame for failures. External. People with a high external locus of control believe that control over events and what other people do is outside them, and that they personally have little or no control over such things.

Locus of Control - Changing minds

Locus of control is the degree to which people believe that they, as opposed to external forces (beyond their influence), have control over the outcome of events in their lives. The concept was developed by Julian B. Rotter in 1954, and has since become an aspect of personality psychology.A person's "locus" (plural "loci", Latin for "place" or "location") is conceptualized as internal (a ...
