Plato's first treatment of rhetoric, almost entirely hostile, occurs in his Apology, the dramatic retelling of Socrates' trial and execution. Likely written between 390 and 399 BC (Kennedy 53), in the Apology Socrates chooses to die with plain truth rather than live thanks to excessive flourish.

Historical Rhetorics/Plato's Relationship to Rhetoric ...

As far as rhetoric and the soul are concerned (and the comparison with medicine shows that, even for Socrates/Plato, rhetoric, properly understood, may indeed be viewed as a form of, if not healing, at least caring for the soul in the same way medicine is caring for the body), what that means is that we must first know the nature of the soul and whether it is simple or composite (the lower plane of the physis), then understand how it acts and suffers (the intermediate plane of action and ...

Plato's Phaedrus - Plan of dialogue on rhetoric

Gorgias (/ ˈ ɡ ɔːr ɡ i ə s /; Greek: Γοργίας [gorgíːs]) is a Socratic dialogue written by Plato around 380 BC. The dialogue depicts a conversation between Socrates and a small group of sophists (and other guests) at a dinner gathering. Socrates debates with the sophist seeking the true definition of rhetoric, attempting to pinpoint the essence of rhetoric and unveil the flaws ...

Gorgias (dialogue) - Wikipedia

The analogy to dialectic has important implications for the status of rhetoric. Plato argued in his Gorgias that rhetoric cannot be an art (technè), since it is not related to a definite subject, while real arts are defined by their specific subjects, as e.g. medicine or shoemaking are defined by their products, i.e., health and shoes. However, though dialectic has no definite subject, it is easy to see that it nevertheless rests on a method, because dialectic has to grasp the reason why ...

The study of rhetoric was contested in classical Greece: on the one side were the sophists, and on the other side were Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. The trio saw rhetoric and poetry as tools that were too often used to manipulate others by appealing to emotion and omitting facts.

Rhetoric (Aristotle) - Wikipedia

A philosophic rhetoric would be a discursive practice that seeks to shape or reshape the soul as an affective and endoxic entity. For Plato, the human soul is, in part, a rhetorical artifact. Any defense of justice that fails rhetorically to transform its audience's beliefs and desires necessarily fails as a genuinely persuasive defense.
